A common problem in legal scholarship is the one of author identification. Many authors run into issues when they share the same or a similar name with other authors, or their name changes due to life events, and in some instances there is confusion over whether the name contains hyphenation, prefixes, suffixes, or middle initials. ORCID (Open Research and Contributor ID) is a free, non-profit site that attempts to resolve these instances of name ambiguity. Authors can easily create their own persistent digital ORCID identifier that helps distinguish them from other authors, thereby ensuring that their work is correctly recognized and attributed. Recently, ORCID identifiers have been integrated into SSRN, so once an author has an ORCID ID they can log onto SSRN and connect their account to this ID. Individual author registration for ORCID is available at https://orcid.org/register.

Preparing for the ABA Site Inspection

As part of the preparation for the upcoming ABA site inspection in April, the Library is placing a strong emphasis on highlighting the scholarship of our faculty over the past few years. In addition to the permanent faculty publications display cases in the Library, we will also make available to the inspectors print copies of articles and books authored over the past 3 years, copies of our annual scholarship brochures, and a printed version of our cumulative Bibliography of Faculty Scholarship. Please note that the 2015 scholarship brochure will be available later this month. The inspectors have also been alerted to our scholarship repository, which hosts copies of faculty authored articles and descriptions of faculty authored books dating back to 1950.
