Bloomberg Law has recently added two new features to their ever expanding database. The first, BNA Circuit Splits Table, is taken straight from the BNA U.S. Law Week publication. Each month the publication provides a handy chart of the most interesting circuit splits in the country, detailing the topic, the name of the case, and the issue at the center of the split. Although these tables were previously available on Bloomberg Law, they have now been compiled into one place for easy reference purposes.

The second new feature is the Supreme Court Today Tracker. This is a very popular feature that until now was only available on the BNA Premier Database. The tracker allows users to look up pending and decided Supreme Court cases using a wide variety of filters including status, event type, primary and secondary topic, date, etc.

New Research Guides

The Law Library staff recently released new research guides to complement the Certificate Programs offered by the Law School. The first of the new guides is Information Privacy Law, which complements the Information Privacy Law track of the Law & Technology Institute. The second guide is Law and Public Policy Research, complementing the Law and Public Policy certificate program. The final new guide is Securities Law Research, complementing the Securities Law certificate program. There will be more new guides tailored to meet the needs of the other tracks and certificate programs published later this year.
