The Law Library Wants Your Opinion!

The law library’s biennial student survey will take place after Spring Break. This is your chance to tell us what you think about library services and resources, and to provide us with information for use in planning goals and objectives. In response to past surveys, the library has:

- Added new print and digital study aids
- Expanded the textbooks on reserve to include staple courses
- Replaced copier/printer/scanner equipment
- Added more casual seating throughout the library
- Added a small student lounge on Floor 2

CUA law students who complete the survey are eligible to enter a drawing for one of four Google Home Minis. Survey responses are completely anonymous.

New & Notable Books

The New & Notable table in the Library lobby holds a selection of recently received titles. Of particular interest this month is Agape, Justice, and Law. Professor Lucia Silecchia’s essay, “The When and Where of Love: Subsidiarity as a Framework for Care of the Elderly,” is a highlight of this collection, which questions “how might Christian love shape law?” Other new titles now on display address controversial current issues. The Second Amendment and Gun Control, also a collection of essays, presents a balanced discussion of constitutional arguments in a broader social, cultural, and political context. Government surveillance and the legal challenges to it are the subject of Being Watched. The relationship between speech and atrocity is explored in Atrocity Speech Law: Foundation, Fragmentation, Fruition, an attempt at a cohesive legal framework to address the issue. Also of note is American Justice 2017: the Supreme Court in Crisis, which analyzes how the Court adapted after Justice Scalia’s unexpected death, when it functioned as an eight-Justice bench for most of the 2016 term.
